Report

On March 19, 2022, the Department of Political Science, Mahatma Gandhi Shati Smarak Mahavidyalaya Garua Maksudpur, Ghazipur organized a Guest Lecture on “The Emerging Trends in Indian Politics”. The theme of this seminar was “The Emerging Trends in Indian Politics”.

The head of the Department of Hindi and the incumbent Principal Shri Sushil Tiwari made the ceremonial welcome of the guest speaker. Mr. Alok Kumar, Assistant Professor has been the resource person of this lecture. He made his opening remarks on the current prevalent political system and how this political system has been influenced by a diverse range of social issues. He added that the culture of politics is the attitude that the majority of the population has towards the nation's political institutions. It may be argued that it is a psychological issue with the people. Additionally, it refers to the mindset of individuals towards political activities rather than political actions themselves.

The idea of culture politics is evolving, although this is happening gradually. As new events develop, people's perceptions shift. There are significant shifts in attitudes depending on how people transition from the village to the city and how they live in the city. However, cultural attitudes and values shift extremely gradually. As a result, the mindset towards politics reflects fairly enduring characteristics of political culture. This political culture leads to the making of political trends.

The rules of nature are ever changing. Everything in our world is always changing, regardless of time. The shift could be total or only partially, gradual or revolutionary, man-made or natural, progressive or regressive, etc. Change in one area of life has an impact on all the others as well. However, due to a number of developments, including Information and Communication Technology, advancements in the sciences of transportation and science, as well as socio-economic sectors worldwide, the changes are revolutionary in the modern day.

Politics' nature is constantly evolving as time and circumstances change. Similarly, Indian politics are accurate. Since independence, there have been many changes, and the process is still ongoing. Based mostly on the effect of a pluralistic society with numerous minorities on the basis of belief, language, and caste, Indian politics have formed its own gradual patterns.

Mr. Subhash Chandra Yadav ended the workshop by expressing the vote of thanks to the speaker.
